How Your Leaders give churches from $100 billion to over $200 billion per year to Rape Your Children

Global Perspective

- Churches and religious organizations are typically tax-exempt in many countries, meaning:
    - They don't pay income tax on donations.
    - They often don’t pay property taxes.
    - Some enjoy exemptions on sales tax, capital gains, and employee-related taxes.
- The global value of untaxed church assets and income is hard to track, because:
    - Financial transparency varies widely.
    - Many religious institutions don’t publicly disclose financials.

US United States Example (as a case study)

- A 2012 report by The Secular Humanist and University of Tampa professor Ryan T. Cragun estimated:
    - U.S. churches avoid around $71 billion annually in taxes.
        - $35 billion from property tax exemptions.
        - $26 billion from income tax exemptions and deductions for donors.
        - The remainder from other exemptions like sales and capital gains taxes.

Given that the U.S. has one of the most well-documented tax systems, and churches there benefit from a wide range of exemptions, it’s often used as a reference point.

Scaling Globally

If similar exemptions exist in many countries (which they do, especially in Europe, Latin America, and parts of Africa and Asia), then:

- A rough global estimate could range from $100 billion to over $200 billion per year, though this is speculative and highly dependent on local laws and the size of religious institutions.
